The Purpose of Life Insurance

The value of your selected insurance policy extends beyond the length of your life itself. Throughout your life, the choices you make have consequences. This type of insurance ensures that your family is not stuck with the cost of your decisions. This includes any unpaid loans for purchases such as your house, car, or education.

Yet, the benefits of your policy are not exclusively for your loved ones. The policy you select will determine what personal advantages you will gain while alive.

Types of Insurance Options That Fit Your Life

Your insurance policy should be modified to fit your life, not the other way around. There are three different types of life insurance: term, whole, and universal life insurance. The biggest difference you will come across is between term and whole life insurance.

Term life insurance provides protection only for a certain amount of time. This type of insurance requires you to pay back a specified amount within a defined period.

Alternatively, whole life insurance is less flexible and is meant to cover you for your entire lifetime.

If neither of the above fits your needs, there is universal life insurance. This type of insurance is designed to stay with you throughout your life as well as offers flexible payment options.
